in both museums.

Miró knew of Picasso. Picasso discovered Miró. Theirs was a relationship based on friendship, respect and admiration. They shared a passion for poetry and an interest in the performing arts and popular culture. Using their individual voices and unprecedented artistic intensity, they transformed the painting, ceramic art and sculpture of the twentieth century. And both chose to bequeath their legacy to Barcelona.

The exhibition is organised into seven chronological and themed sections and features over 250 works from public and private collections around the world. From Miró and Picasso's first meeting in 1917 in Barcelona, their involvement in the pavilion of the Spanish Republic in Paris in 1937, their interest in the ancient technique of ceramics to their final monumental projects, visitors will discover that these two artists shared many significant moments in their careers.

Miró-Picasso is among the events being held as part of the 'Picasso Celebration 1973-2023'.
